Good mentoring is found to be discipline agnostic. The same principles apply when mentoring a medical resident or a marketing manager.

This course will introduce the fundamental principles of peer mentoring, which primarily involves mentors and mentees at the same level (Faculty-Faculty, Student-Student). The topics discussed will go over some critical concepts to keep in mind throughout the peer mentoring process. We will discuss emotional intelligence and communication skills in relation to peer mentoring. Three different types of mentoring, which include academic, research, and pastoral mentoring, will be discussed. Finding a near-ideal mentor can be difficult, so participants will be provided with some hands-on exercises to assist them in their search. Virtual mentoring is a critical skill for a mentor to possess in these unique times. This programme will provide virtual mentoring tips to participants. Finally, some fundamental principles will be discussed to assist in establishing peer mentoring programmes in the workplace.

In summary, the workshop will provide a comprehensive overview of peer mentoring, with an emphasis on workplace mentoring.

OBJECTIVES

At the end of this CPD, participants should be able to

- Discuss the pros and cons of peer mentorship
- Discuss emotional intelligence in peer mentoring
- Describe the pros and cons of having a mentor in the workplace
- Identify the attributes of a good mentor
- Describe the dos and don'ts of virtual mentoring
- Describe points on how to plan for an implementation of a workable mentoring programme
